

Get where you have to go without having to get up
and go.

Fly Incontinental.

Two hours into a six hour flight, and you've had one too many Cokes to drink. And, of course, you have a window seat. Time to wake up the folks next to you so you can crawl past them and into the line for the lavatory. Then comes the toilet with the mega-suction flush – always a bit scary, because you can't help but wonder if that story about the little old lady who got her guts sucked out might be true.

This wouldn't be a problem if you flew Incontinental. That's because Incontinental has implemented our exclusive, patented Catheterseat™ on all our aircraft, in every seat. Your seat is not only a floatation device – it's a personal waste disposal system. Just sit down, insert the catheter, and buckle up. If you have to go, well, go. You're all set for the duration of your flight.

No more worrying about bothering the people next to you. No more standing in line for the bathroom between connecting flights. Sit back. Relax. Take a whiz.

You're flying Incontinental.
